Mobile & Handheld Learning

Educating the "A for Apps" Generation

DAY-1 Friday, 9th December 2011

We are now in an information society that creates about 2 exabytes of data every day. Information processing and access tools are much more readily available and learners will soon have tablets in their hands. The principle of freedom of learner choice will drive a model of CYOLD (Choose Your Own Learning Device), that will result in the classroom having devices ranging from the Government sponsored Aakash to the aspirational iPad and a whole range in between.

Live Learning™ in the classroom requires using these in a pedagogical sound manner, with the teacher playing multiple roles of curator, creator, coach, mentor and motivator all converged in one. A very challenging but exciting place to be in. We need to ensure that 'No Teacher is Left Behind' in this exciting journey.

The following program is designed as the first step towards this and once the glimpse of this exciting future is seen and its potential appreciated, it will be followed up with appropriate programs to include all educators.

Annual Update on Matters Educational 2011

DAY-2 Saturday, 10th December 2011

As the quote from Bill Gates shows, the coming years will fundamentally change the course of high quality learning. The program for this day is to take note of key developments and reflect upon them and then plan a way forward. We will share efforts and experiences and deliberate on the future. And not too long term.....but over the next 5 years.

While some presenters have been identified, the purpose of Pecha Kucha presentations is to give an opportunity to make very short (5 to 10 minutes) presentations. The orthodox PechaKucha is a set of 20 slides for 20 seconds each, but we are more flexible. So if you have any thought to share or wish to take part in the panel discussion, do let us know and we will try to accommodate you.

The program begins with a survey of key developments worldwide, deliberates on some important issues and closes with a panel discussion on the future models of Education.
